seminary teams got together on the Time, 1h, 40m, Umpire, R. Phelps. Valley fair grounds yesterday afternoon. Brattlebore high won, 11 to 3, in a game in which there was nothing sensational except a running one-hand catch by Randall, center fielder of the Bond, who had never played on the local school team before, developed an exceptional batting eye. The first time up he hit to short and was thrown out. The next time he singled and when he tried again he bettered that attempt one base. A long fly to center was his next offering and on his last appearance he doubled again, thereby collecting a batting average that would satisfy most any youth on his first at-

Adams twirled the first three innings and allowed one hit in each of the first two innings. A double and a single aided by two luscious errors gave the visitors two runs. Shea next shifted from center field to the pitcher's slab, Adams retiring to the middle garden. The first three men to face the new twirler fanned the air with freedom and viciousness. The next three retired on infield taps. In his third inning two singles and two passes shoved the last run for the vis itors over the plate. Shea regained control of the situation in the seventh the last inning he twirled, and retired his opponents in order, Stowell pitched the last two innings, allowing

It was not until the fourth inning that Brattleboro high started scoring bunches. Three runs in the fourth or good hitting were followed by three more in the fifth which developed from two errors, a pass and a single. A hit by pitcher, a base on balls, two singles and Bond's second double developed a bunch of four in the seventh and in the eighth Gallup's triple and a passed ball shoved across the last tally.

A closer inspection of Zeller's layout for a league reveals the fact that Greenfield is a little shy on entering a league where the salary limit is $1, 200 without the manager. Greenfield rightly figures that it is by far the smallest town in the proposed league the big outlay the most. Greenfield would much prefer unorganized baseball in Twin State territory.

Walter Sneil, ex-Brown university star, who played with Brattleboro as eatcher and first baseman one season in the Twin State league and who was with the Boston Americans and New England league clubs later, will not report to the Lowell team, to which he was assigned this season. He is taking special courses of study at Brown and acting as battery coach there. When the college senson is ended he will play with the Colonials, a strong indepedent team which is being o organized in Providence.

Among the former University of Coveleskie, Bagley and O'Neill; Vermont baseball stars who are now devoting themselves to the national game as a profession are Jack Halstein, who starred a few years ago at the initial sack, and Harola Mayforth, who crowned his four years' work behind the bat by captaining last year's nine. Both boys are now in the Eastern league, Halstein with Worcester, where he will undoubtedly play first base during the coming season, while Mayforth is trying for a backstopping position on the team representing Springfield, his home city. Mayforth is well remembered as a Twin State leaguer, with the Brattleboro and Greenfield teams.
